1. The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various methods of determining the rate of reaction. It is shown that the most reliable method is that of measuring the change in concentration of one of the reactants or products. This method is applicable to all reactions, but it is often difficult to apply to reactions in which the reactants or products are gases or liquids. In such cases, it is often necessary to use other methods, such as measuring the change in pressure or the change in color. The paper discusses the advantages and disadvantages of these various methods, and it shows that the most reliable method is that of measuring the change in concentration of one of the reactants or products.

2. The second part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various factors which affect the rate of reaction. It is shown that the rate of reaction is affected by the concentration of the reactants, the temperature, the presence of a catalyst, and the surface area of the reactants. The paper discusses the effect of each of these factors on the rate of reaction, and it shows that the rate of reaction is increased by increasing the concentration of the reactants, by increasing the temperature, by adding a catalyst, and by increasing the surface area of the reactants.
